

Michal Kondrat bio

Michal Kondrat is a graduate of the Warsaw School of Economics. He worked as a Board Deputy Director at Polish Radio for five years.

Since 2013, he has been running the KONDRAT-MEDIA company, which produces and distributes films focused on Christian values.

His first directed documentary, "How to Defeat the Satan," won the Grand Prix of the XXIX International Film Festival May 2014 in Niepokalanów.

His next documentary distributed in cinemas, "Matteo," was about a monk, a great exorcist, who died 400 years ago, and now at his grave numerous healings and releases from the possession of the evil spirit take place.

Another production by Michał Kondrat was a docudrama, "The Two Crowns," which is about the life of Saint Father Maksymilian Kolbe. The documentary scenes were shot in three countries: Poland, Italy and Japan. Almost 250,000 viewers saw the film in Poland, and it was released in theaters in 15 countries.

The latest film by Kondrat, "Love and Mercy," which he directed and wrote, is dedicated to Saint Faustina Kowalska and the message of God's Mercy. Theatrical rights to the movie have been sold to about 20 countries. The theatrical release of the movie is scheduled to hit in the U.S. on Oct. 28, 2019, in hundreds of cinemas throughout the country.

Kondrat currently lives in New York, and is working on the screenplay of a new docudrama about souls. He was inspired by the experience of mystics and the latest scientific research on human consciousness at the time of death.
